Objective of the session

Aid givers have for decades tried to improve the connection between outside assistance and the intended results. As billions of dollars flow into global health partnerships such the GAVI Alliance and the Global Fund, and through traditional bilateral and multilateral funders of health assistance, strengthening the connection between financial flows and health results increases in importance. This session will present the performance based aid approaches implemented by GAVI Alliance and the Global Fund, followed by a new regional initiative just beginning in Central America and Mexico and two new proposals for facilitating more performance based transfers.
